A brief summary of the chapter

CASE STUDY

THE PLANTATION SLAVES

For nearly two centuries, between the 1600s and 1800s, there was a booming trade in African people who were kidnapped and sold as slaves. These black slaves were treated like cattle by the white plantation owners of the United States, and sold to people who paid the highest price, because they thought they were more civilized and superior. The slaves lived under unhygienic conditions, without any rights and pay.

The 16th US President, Abraham Lincoln, outlawed slavery in the mid-1800s.

Although free by law, the black people had to constantly fight for their right to dignity and equality for over a century. In the 1960s they acquired equal rights as citizens under the leadership of Dr Martin Luther King who led the non-violent Civil Disobedience protests.
